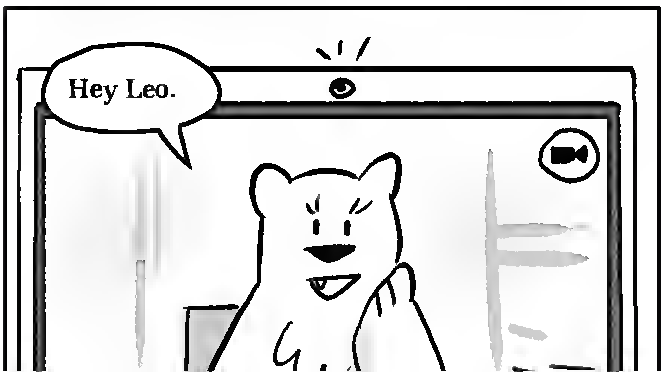
ROAR STREET JOURNAL

End of the Day

Hey sis, how are you doing over there?

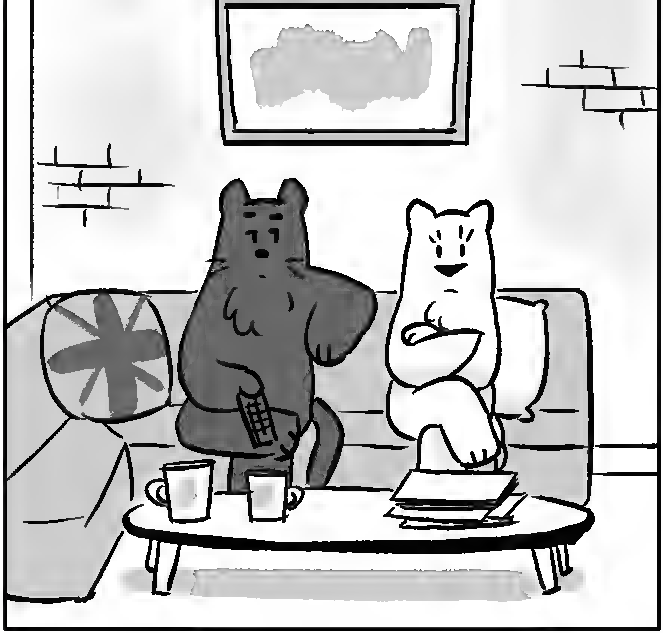


Hey Leo.

I'm fine.
It's rare that you are free on a weeknight!
Yeah... because I had a fight with Pan.

No one is talking now.

But it's night time at your place and you're gonna sleep soon,
aren't you gonna solve it tonight?
I know, I'll try.
Don't hold grudges over night.



I'm going to sleep.

I know we were fighting over something stupid,
and I'm still angry...
...but we need to keep our promise of saying "I love you" before bed.

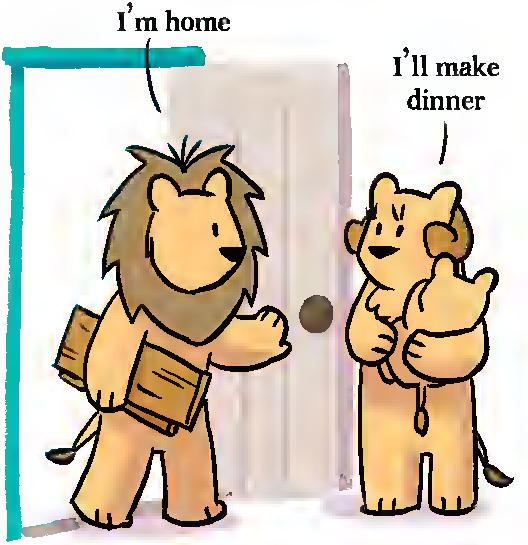
I want to share a story about my grandparents.

My grandparents never fought.

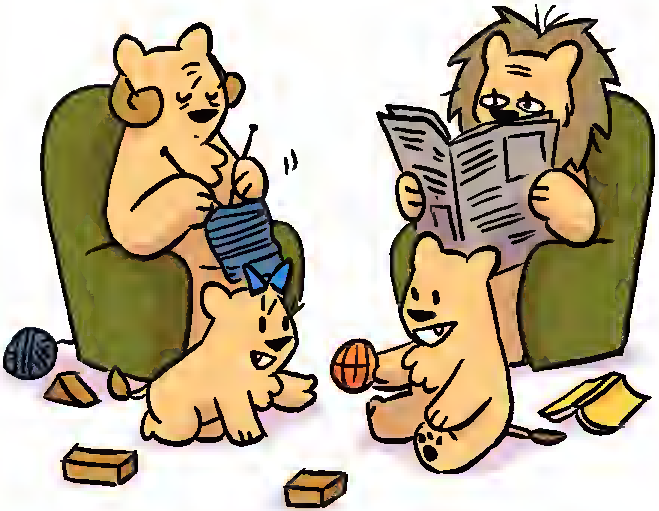
They were a hardworking couple who seldom speaks love.



I'm home
I'll make dinner

Although they never argue,

I never see them kiss, hug
or say sweet things to each other.



But over the years I spend with them,
I saw love from their eyes and interactions.

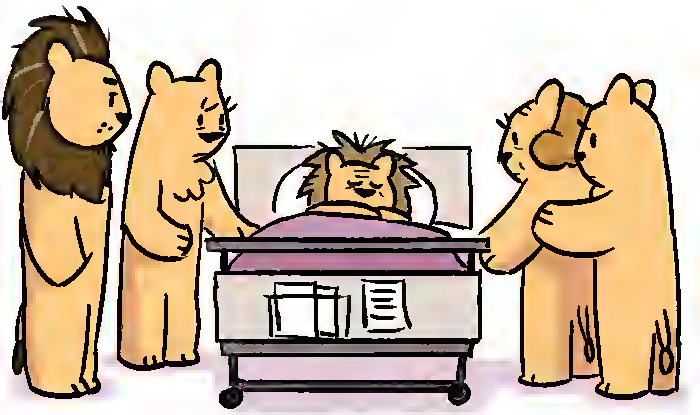
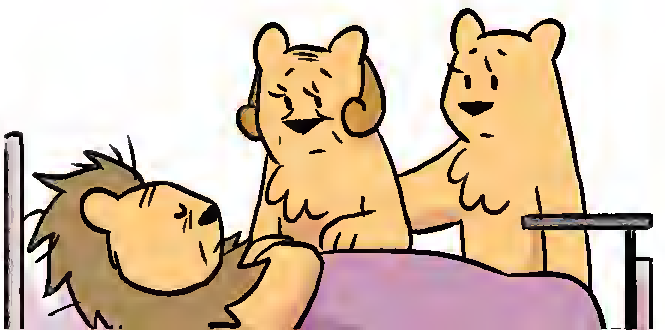
During grandpa's final days,
he was unconscious.

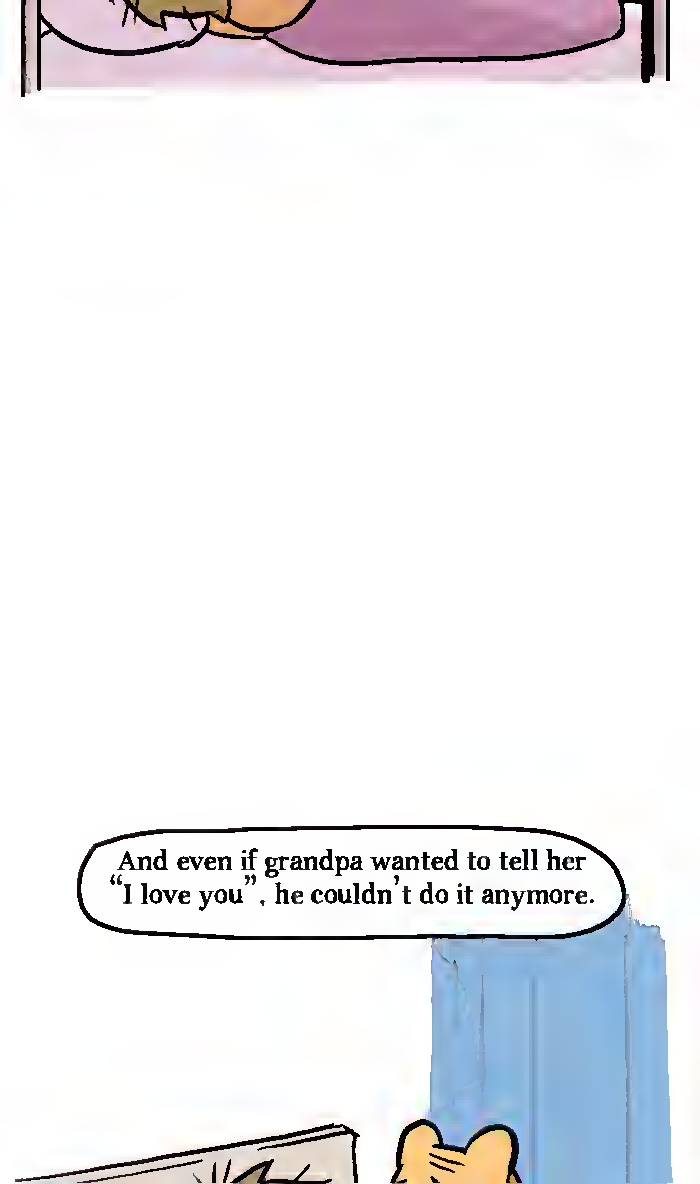
Everyone was sad, but grandma was the saddest.



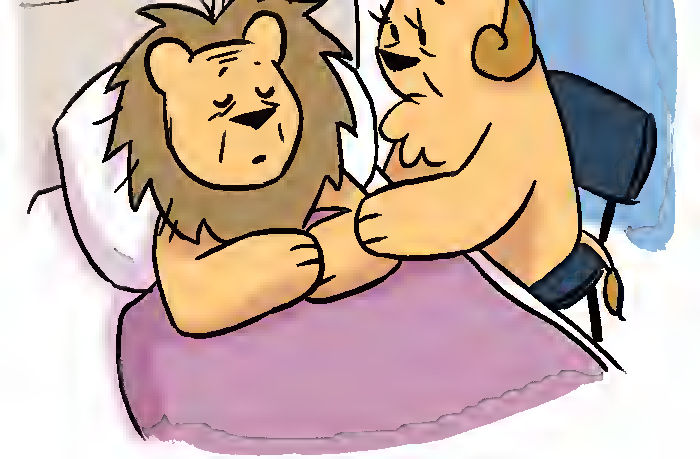
I remember she said,
she never told grandpa "I love you".

And when she wanted to tell him,
he couldn't hear her anymore.





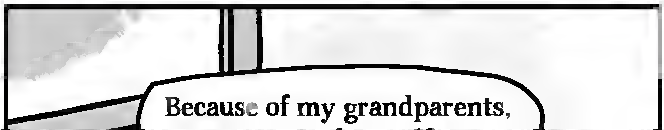
And even if grandpa wanted to tell her "I love you", he couldn't do it anymore.



It was her biggest regret

It was her biggest regret.

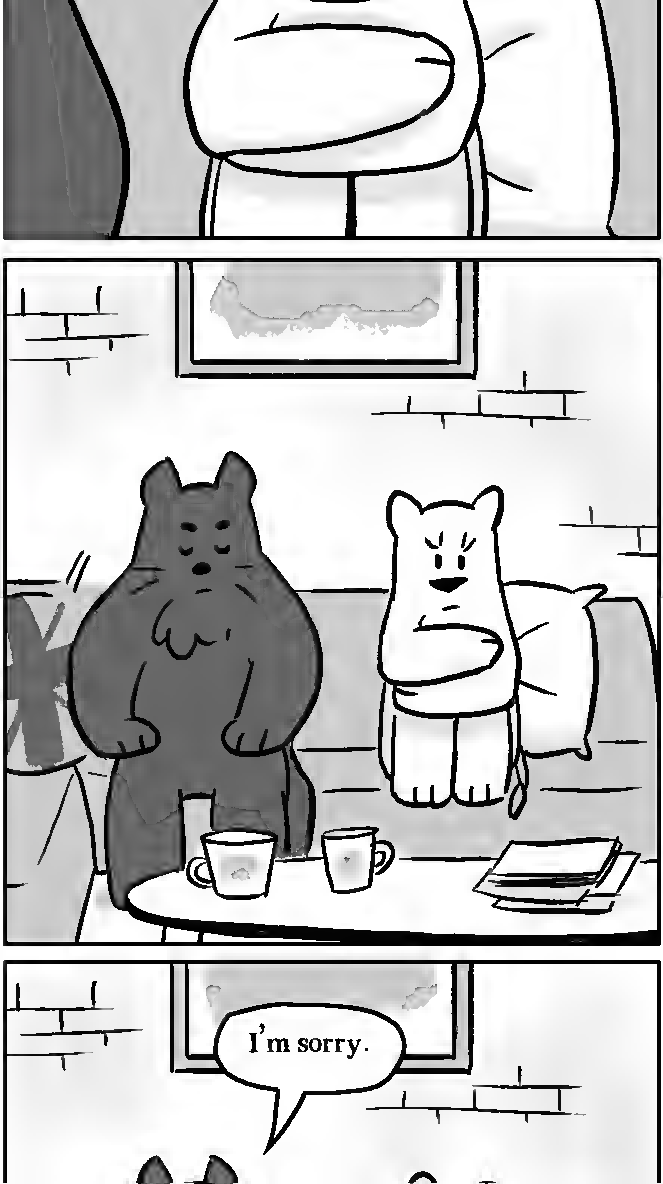
As we get older, sometimes, the end of the day, could be the end.
No one knowsif we will live to see another sunrise.



Because of my grandparents,

I promised myself...
To say "I love you" to my love ones every night...

...even if things aren't going well, even if we are mad at each other.



I'm sorry.

I didn't mean to fight.

No grudges are worth keeping overnight...
We can work this out.
